The patient lost consciousness in a chair, and her relatives had to immediately perform cardiopulmonary resuscitation. The man, who was 50 years old at the time, was in a deep sleep, and his wife initially thought that the patient was sleeping. When she woke him, he started to have memory problems. The patient's wife said, "We had been sleeping together as a married couple for several years, but I had not seen him drink much, so I thought that it was because of that. I was shocked when I saw him at home." She said, "I didn't think that he was drinking, but when he had a glass of whiskey, he turned into an addict." The patient's wife contacted his family doctor, but did not tell him that her husband was an alcoholic. The patient's family doctor said, "The patient was admitted to a hospital emergency department at midnight on October 24th, 2010. He told me that he had no alcohol at all, but his wife said that she thought that he had been drinking. She had a suspicion about him and checked his urine, but it did not have any alcohol." He said, "It is very rare that a patient drink alcohol and then lose consciousness. I think that he was in a place where he was not in a conscious state and did not remember f678ea9f9e
